

May 2014 – Harrington

Yet another beautiful day for our walk from Harrington to Arthingworth. We started our walk by crossing two fields where young bulls were grazing. They lined up like soldiers but as we passed in front of them, they scampered away across the field. The next couple of fields had some sheep with mothers calling their young by continually bleating. We stopped just outside Arthingworth for a brief break and then continued along a bridle path where we were passed by three riders on their horses. The final part of our walk for some was to pass by Thorpe Underwood whilst the rest of us walked up a hill for $\frac{3}{4}$ mile, arriving at the Tollemarche Arms where some of us enjoyed a very nice lunch.

A very enjoyable walk.
